Letter from the Editor

It's the first week of college. It's the beginning of your new life as "the" college kid. You're busy trying to organize your life. You have three massive boxes of underwear that your mom has packed for you but with only so much closet space. You're desperately trying to make new friends, while trying to cover up your secret obsession for all things David Hasselhoff. You take a shower, but ten minutes later you start sweating like that man on the subway who you decided to sit next to. You still talk about which colleges you did and didn't get into. You wish you had air-conditioning in your room.

Welcome to PENN, Philly, and your new home, Kings Court English College House! I am your Communications Manager, Franky Lee, and I'm in charge of running "The TP," a world-class, low-budget, weekly publication dedicated to serving you while you are relaxing your bowels. The TP is in its third year of publication and has been a great way for the residents of KCECH to know what is going on in the house, at PENN, and in the city. The TP is a resident-friendly, interactive publication, that is if you would like to get involved with this bathroom publications, let me know via email - franky@wharton.upenn.edu as soon as possible. Any submission, poetry/jokes/puzzles/prose, will be appreciated and published after being scrutinized by yours truly.

Take care and get excited for the second in-stall-ation.

Jokes

A farmer is milking his cow. As he is milking, a fly comes along and flies into the cows ear. A little bit later, the farmer notices the fly in the milk. The farmer looks up and says, "Hmph. In one ear, out the other."

Q: How do you greet a 2-headed monster?
A: Hello, Hello

Q: Why did the little boy blush when he opened the refrigerator door?
A: Because he saw the salad dressing.

Q: What did the princess say when she went to the photo developing center?
A: "One day my prints will come."

These jokes are so bad, I can't Handel them. They make me Lisztless. They can be too Mendelssohn. You'd better go out Bach and stay in Haydn.
